Tom's Problem

Tom was a chubby and overweight boy who couldn't stop eating. He devoured anything edible in front of him. He enjoyed eating immensely. Last Sunday, he ate a huge amount of afternoon tea at the dining room table, which was laden with snacks such as potato chips, chicken wings, bars of chocolate, porks, pies, tarts, waffles and biscuits. In his hand was a can of Coke. He ate and ate, shoving forkfuls of pastries into his mouth, until there was no more food on the table. He leaned back and sighed contentedly.

After a few minutes, Tom began to feel drowsy. Sleepily, he drank the last ^{drops} of his soda and settled down for a nap. Suddenly, Tom had a strange feeling in his stomach. 'Mum, my stomach doesn't feel good. What should I do?' he gulped. His mother walked into the room and stared at the empty dishes on the table. 'Since you ate so much, you probably have a stomach ache. Oh dear! We need to go to the clinic,' his mother sighed.

An hour later, Tom's father had ^{drove} driven them to the nearest clinic. Tom clutched his stomach and groaned. Seeing this, his parents helped carry him to the doctor. Inside, ^{the clinic} the doctor did some tests and announced that Tom would be fine after some treatment. Tom whimpered

'Please, doctor, don't give me an injection!' The doctor stared sternly at him. 'It is not my fault,' he replied. 'However, you only need to eat some pills.' After giving Tom his medicine, the doctor gave Tom some advice on how to keep his body healthy. 'You should do more exercise,' the doctor suggested. 'You shouldn't eat so much food. You should eat more vegetables and less meat. You shouldn't eat junk food since it is bad for you.'

From then on, Tom cut down on his meals. He exercised every day. Soon, he became very fit. Tom was very grateful to the doctor. Because of the doctor's advice, he was now healthy and aware of the dangers of obesity. Tom promised himself that he would always remember the person who had helped change his life.
